Monday, 5th April

Dear diary,

What a day I've had! As you know there was a school trip to the Science Museum today and I really wasn't bothered about going. I thought it'd be dead boring, a total yawn-fest, but in fact I was completely blown away by it. There were literally tonnes of things to do and see. I didn't realise you could get to do real experiments. Really awesome! Of course Nate acted the idiot as usual and nearly had us all thrown out because of his behaviour. Mr Mason really told him off and made him stay right beside him for the rest of the visit, like a 2-year-old. It was so hilarious we couldn't stop laughing at him, and the more we laughed, the more Nate sulked. Ha, it served him right.

Anyway, a fantastic day, I'm so glad I decided to go in the end. I think I need to learn a lesson from this: don't judge a book by its cover (unless it's Nate, ha ha, what you see is what you get with him: an IDIOT!! Even if he's incredibly good-looking, in fact drop-dead gorgeous... STOP!)

Time for bed, YAWN!! Back tomorrow!
